

Nineteenth-Century International Exhibitions

The international exhibitions, expositions and world fairs that dominated the cultural scene in the second half of the nineteenth century provided nations with opportunities to demonstrate their artistic, technical and scientific ingenuity. These exhibitions supported a broader civilising mission through their juxtaposition of world cultures, their encouragement of trade relations, and their promotion of advances in manufacturing and industry.

The V&A Archive is the repository for the Museum's institutional records. These records are a rich resource for the study of the nineteenth-century international exhibitions in which it participated and include exhibition files, press cuttings, photographs, official correspondence and minutes, and annual reports of the Department of Science and Art.

Great Exhibition of the Works of Industry of all Nations 1851

The records of the Great Exhibition are still held by the Royal Commission for the Exhibition of 1851 at Imperial College London. The Archive can be contacted at: royalcom1851@ic.ac.uk. The online catalogue of the Archive of the Royal Commission for the Exhibition of 1851 is at:

<http://www.calmview.eu/RoyalCommission1851/CalmView/>

The V&A's National Art Library holds an extensive collection of printed material relating to the Great Exhibition, an overview of which is available at: <http://www.vam.ac.uk/content/articles/n/national-art-library-great-exhibition-collection/>. This is the principal source for the study of the Great Exhibition at the V&A.

Information on objects acquired at the Exhibition can be found on Search the Collections: <http://collections.vam.ac.uk/>. Further information about the Great Exhibition can be found at: <http://www.vam.ac.uk/page/g/great-exhibition/>.

Sources for other international exhibitions

The majority of records concerning international exhibitions are in the archive series MA/35: International Exhibitions, 1869-1957, which comprises 158 files, just under half of which concern nineteenth-century exhibitions. Files may include: general correspondence, acquisition papers, press cuttings, display photographs, budget papers, report of jurors, and object lists. V&A Archive staff will be happy to provide further information on these files. The V&A Archive also holds press cuttings albums for:

- Dublin exhibition 1865 (MA/49/1/5)
  - Exhibitions, industrial &c., 1869 -1870 (MA/49/1/31)
  - Paris exhibition 1855 (MA/49/1/42)
  - London International Exhibition 1871 (MA/49/1/34)
  - Paris International Exhibition of Agriculture, Industry, and Fine Arts 1878 (MA/49/1/50)
- Charles Thurston Thompson, Royal Indian transport display at the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1855 under the classification 'Raw Produce of India', albumen print from wet collodion on glass negative, Paris, 1855, Museum no. 33:323*

In addition to exhibition files, further materials for the following exhibitions await cataloguing but are currently under the accession number Ao463:

- Philadelphia Centennial international exhibition, 1876: minute book and printed forms
- Paris Universal exhibition & retrospective exhibition of means of transport in the world (1889)
- London International Health Exhibition 1884
- London International inventions exhibition 1885
- London Colonial & Indian exhibition 1886

There is additional information in the printed annual reports of the Department of Science and Art, available in the V&A Archive.

The ED 84 series of files concerning the early history and administration of the Museum and its buildings contains some relevant materials:

- Precis of the minutes of the Department of Science and Art, 1852-1893 (ED 84/36-40)
- Arrangements and regulations for exhibitions, comprising correspondence regarding regulations for exhibitions and British involvement in international exhibitions and the lending of objects to foreign museums, 1892-1937 (ED 84/316)

Official catalogues of many international exhibitions are held in the National Art Library:
