Ove Arup (1895-1988) was the most influential engineer of the 20th century and the pioneer of a multidisciplinary approach to design that has defined the way engineering is understood and practiced today. This exhibition will focus on the design philosophy of Ove Arup, revealing his ideas of collaborative working, total architecture and design as a humanistic and technological tool for social responsibility. On display will be designs for some of Arup's first projects such as Sydney Opera House and the Penguin Pool at London Zoo, including previously unseen archival materials, shown alongside recent projects by Arup, the global engineering consultancy. From the 12th to the 15th centuries, England was internationally famous mainly for one type of artistic product – elaborate luxury embroideries. These objects, were sought after by Kings, Popes and Cardinals, and often bear elaborate imagery. This exhibition aims to bring together an outstanding range of the surviving examples of this celebrated period in England's artistic production to both highlight the exquisite craftsmanship and to explore the world in which they were created. Alongside the magnificent embroideries, many from the V&A's own collection, will be related material in other media such as paintings, manuscripts, metalwork and sculpture.

MAJOR EXHIBITION

You Say You Want a Revolution: Records & Rebels 1966-70

10 September 2016 – 26 February 2017 (media preview: 7 September 2016)

This major exhibition will examine the optimism, ideals and aspirations of the late 1960s, expressed through music, fashion, film, design and political activism, and their relevance to contemporary life. It will investigate the cultural upheaval of the period, the explosive sense of freedom expressed, and the legal changes that took place during those five revolutionary years as the foundation for the way we live now. The spine of the exhibition will be a musical odyssey through some of the greatest music and performances of the 20th century from Sam Cooke's 'A Change is Gonna Come', to The Who's 'My Generation', to Jimi Hendrix at Woodstock; and will focus on particular moments or environments that defined the cultural and social vanguard of the period, including clubs and counterculture, the Paris protests of May 1968, World Fairs, the Woodstock Festival of 1969 and communes on the West Coast of America. The exhibition considers how the finished and unfinished revolutions of the 1960s changed the way we live today and affect the way we think about the future.
